Notable features:

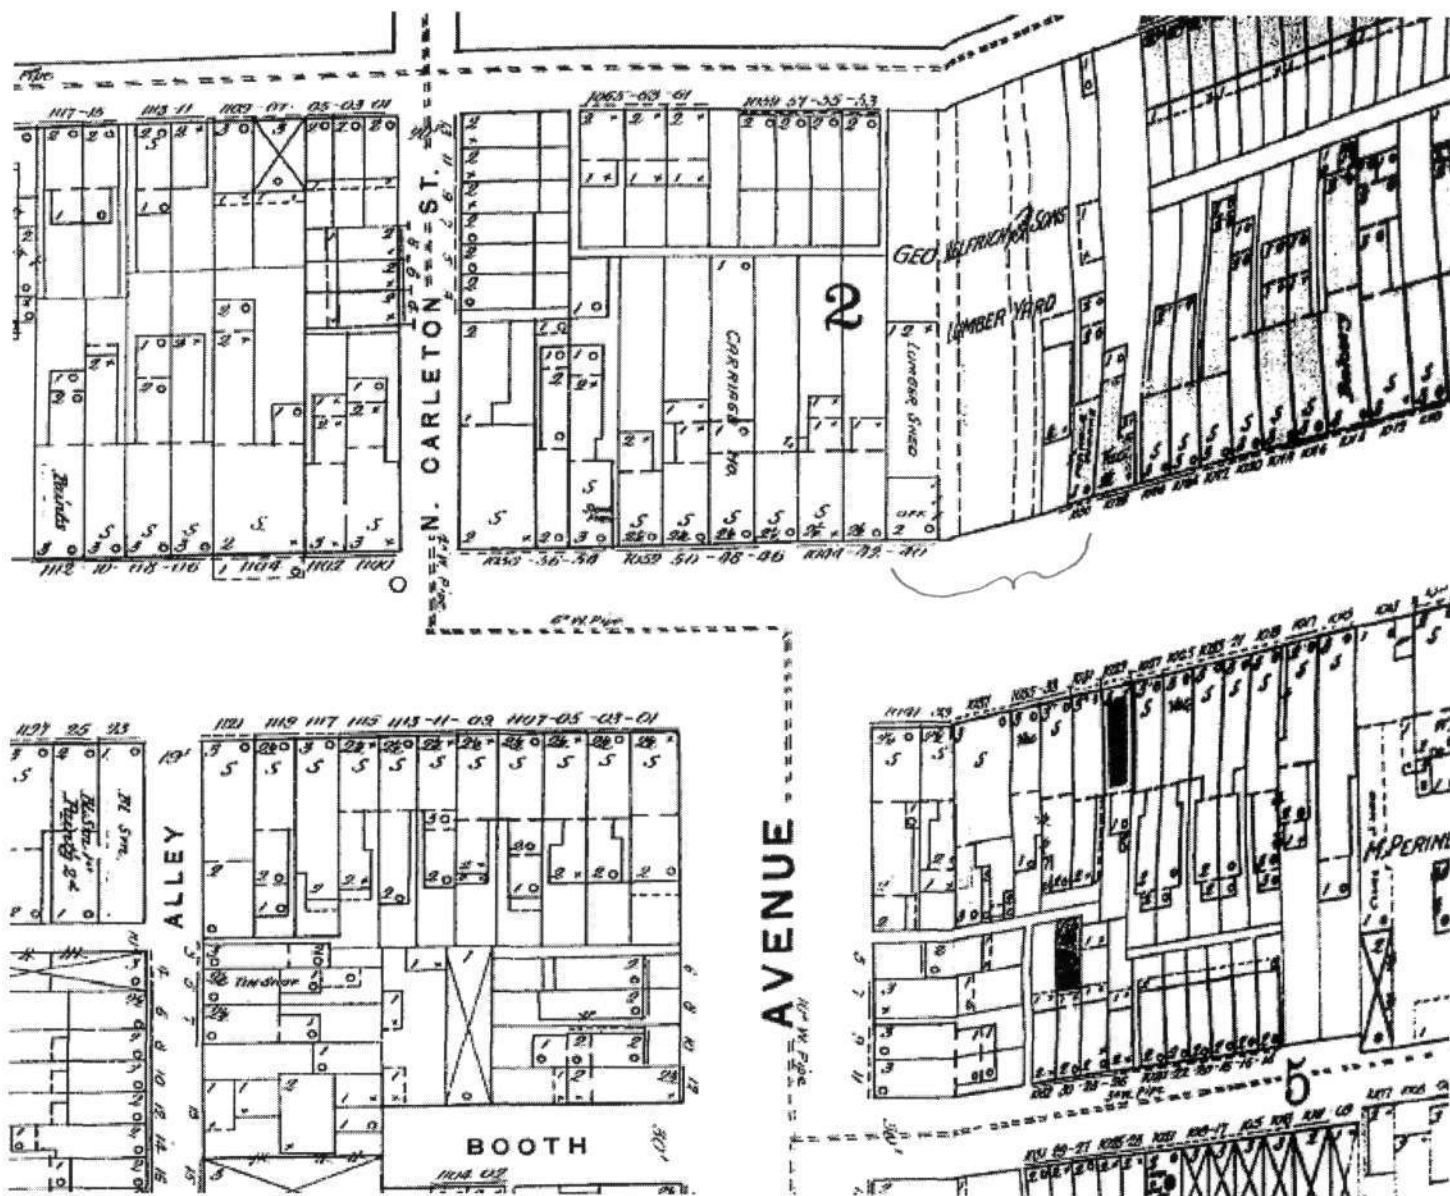

A junkyard on the former site of a 19th century lumber yard and marble works (1885 map); the old buildings at 1028/1030 are a residue of that establishment. The building is a thin row of office spaces enclosing the open yard in the rear. One of the drive-throughs is now blocked up. This space originally connected to the marble works and saw mill (1030/1028) and along Fairmount all the way to Schroeder. One can't help thinking of a possible reuse analagous to Piper's Alley in Chicago, Cannery Row in San Francisco, etc.

Environmental context:

Out of scale and context with street; its appearance and function as a junkyard are a blight to the street. Redesign for commercial purposes.
